Afghanistan in thoughts on Nov. 11

REMEMBRANCE DAY It's been seven long years since the official start of Canada's mission in Afghanistan, a period marked by equal parts confusion, stoicism and pride.

When Canadian soldiers in Afghanistan gather to mark Remembrance Day this Wednesday, most will be thinking of the 133 names inscribed on the marble monument by the army's headquarters at Kandahar Airfield, weighing up what's been sacrificed versus what's been gained.

"I (will) do a little bit of a personal assessment about whether or not I've done everything I possibly could ... to have moved the project forward, to have helped the Afghans," said Capt. Darcy Heddon of Edmonton. "It's always tragic to lose your friends, lose your colleagues, but the best way to get through it and make it meaningful is to think about what it is you need to do next.

Premier considering cabinet shuffle after leadership vote

Ed Stelmach emerged from a leadership review with a comfortable margin of support from

Progressive Conservative party members, but some in the party say the weekend vote sends a clear signal the Alberta premier needs to make changes.

Although the next provincial election is still more than two years away, Tory delegates, who gave Stel-mach's leadership 77 per cent support in Red Deer this weekend, also appear to have given him a message that they want the bleeding to stop.

"He's got a year to fix things, shuffle his cabinet and overhaul his office staff," said former Tory cabinet minister Marv Moore.

"And he has to stop making mistakes. If not, he'll simply have to bow out.

The premier spoke Friday before the 1,300 Tory delegates voted. He talked about the courage it takes to make bold moves and not back down

But after Saturday's vote, Stelmach seemed more contrite and conceded the need for changes, possibly even a cabinet shuffle.

"I need the time to think it through," said a wearylooking Stelmach.

Thomas Lukaszuk, a government member from Edmonton, says with roughly one-quarter of Tory delegates voting against the pre-mier, "there's room for improvement.

"But that's a good place to be in, because if you're in a place where there is no more room for improvement, I think you may get detached from reality," says Liikasziik, the canadian press

"The strong showing of support will solidify the resolve of Premier Stelmach and his supporters that they are steering Alberta in the right direction."

H<sub>1</sub>N<sub>1</sub> Immunizations will be available to more Albertans tomorrow, as health officials expand the campaign, despite a national shortage.

Parents or caregivers of infants six months old or vounger can head to vaccine clinics tomorrow.

Though they won't be turned away from any clinic, parents and caregivers are asked to use the Commonwealth Stadium site.

Proof of age is required for parents, and photo identification and a letter from parents is required for caregivers.

The vaccine will also be available for children under 10 with underlying medical conditions. Proof of age and medical condition is required Provincial officials haven't said when clinics will reopen for the general public.

Canada's consumer watchdog has issued tips to help H1N1-fearing citizens protect themselves.

There are only three products authorized by Health Canada for treatment and prevention of H1N1 — the vaccine. Arepanrix, and antivirals Tamiflu and Relenza.

H1N1 IMMUNIZATION CAMPAIGN:

Our Plan for Canadians

Dr. David Butler-Jones, Chief Public Health Officer of Canada

Public Health Agence de la santé
Agency of Canada publique du Canada

Canada

November 2009

Office of the Chief Public Health Officer of Canada Public Health Agency of Canada 1 800 O-Canada www.fightflu.ca

Sometimes, finding the facts you need to protect yourself and your family from the H1N1 flu virus isn't easy. There are a lot of people giving advice right now.

As the Chief Public Health Officer of Canada and a doctor, I am writing to provide you with the facts about the H1N1 immunization campaign underway across the country.

Our plan for Canadians

We're in the midst of the largest and quickest mass immunization campaign in Canadian history. In fact, next week more than 8,500,000 doses of the H1N1 flu vaccine will have been delivered to provinces and territories.

Immunizing millions of people must be done in phases. As much as I wish we could vaccinate everybody all at once, that's just not realistic. This is why public health officials have identified priority groups who need to be vaccinated first. Among them are:

- People under 65 years of age with chronic health conditions
- · Pregnant women
- Children 6 months to under 5 years of age
- People living in remote and isolated settings or communities
- Health care workers responding to the H1N1 pandemic or delivering essential health care services
- Caregivers or close household contacts of persons who cannot be vaccinated or who may not respond to the vaccine

Once the priority groups are vaccinated, immunization will begin for the rest of the population with a goal of vaccinating every Canadian who wishes to be vaccinated in the weeks to come.

A phased rollout of the vaccine helps protect everyone — the more Canadians who get vaccinated, the better we are all protected against the H1N1 flu virus.

You can be confident that there will be vaccine available when your turn comes. In fact, Canada is one of the few countries in the world to make enough vaccine available for all its citizens.

I can't emphasize enough that getting vaccinated is a safe and effective way to protect yourself and others against the H1N1 flu virus. Consult your local health authorities or the contact information below to learn more.

Yours sincerely,

David Butler ones Dr. David Butler-Jones

Yogathon combats eating disorders

CHARITY An individual's struggle with an eating disorder prompted two Edmontonians to organize yesterday's Yogathon for Charity.

Held at the TransAlta Arts barn, the event gathered seasoned yogis with novices to profit a local anti-eating disorder organization.

After suffering from an eating disorder a decade ago, organizer Lisa Braoldi hopes to promote a healthy body image through yoga.

"We wanted to do something where you celebrate a healthy, happy lifestyle ... and celebrate that we all have different bodies that are beautiful," said Braoldi.

The event was initially organized to support the Society for Assisted Cooperative Recovery from Eating Disorders, but due to a financial shortfall, this non-profit closed its doors on Oct. 30.

Now the Me Without Measure Foundation is the only organization in Edmonton that deals with eating disorders. Its executive director, Peggy Szucs, painted a picture of desperation for her organization in the face of decreased charitable donations.

"The biggest struggle we have is funding, just meeting the demand for the people calling in to the organization looking for help," said Szucs. "There aren't resources.'

Despite the high stakes of the event, participants still managed to relax while enjoying yoga provided by instructors from the city's best yoga studios.

"I think yoga promotes the individual person who is practising ... I think that fits well with the idea of healthy body image," said participant Lyndia Peters.

Exposing the Queer Body

Arts, culture festival begins nine-day run starting Friday

VICTORIA HANDYSIDES

A rainbow-coloured arts fest has reached its coming of age and is preparing for an in-depth dissection of the Queer Body, organizers say.

Exposure: Edmonton's Queer Arts and Culture Festival has reached its third year and has matured past awkward adolescence, festival chair Jennifer Alabiso told Metro.

"We've gone from being this idea to an actual festival," she said. "Having val," she said. "Having pulled it off now two years and established this expectation it will happen every year, we've joined the rank of the actual sexual festivals."

The nine-day romp begins Friday and runs until Nov. 21.

The Queer Body theme is truly personified in Exposure's performers, Alabiso said.

The festival's headliner wrote history in both the queer community and the world of adult entertainment. Buck Angel, the world's first female-to-male transsexual porn star, will screen a film he created specially for Exposure.

Angel was the obvious choice for the Queer Body theme, Alabiso said, adding he perpetually redefines gender and identity politics.

The Best of Buck will dissect his feature films, with an uncensored, interactive Q & A with audience members.

Queer-themed writing, poetry, theatre and comedy also pad the festival's jam-packed program.

"Whenever you say out loud that you're a queer arts and culture festival, you're making a political statement—just by virtue of being willing and able to say it out loud," Alabiso said.

Although its namesake alone speaks volumes about its content, Alabiso said she feels Exposure empowers participants instead of alienating them.

"We're really excited about the work we've done to broaden our audience, and broaden our exposure, if you will," she said.

Jeffrey Walsh, left, died in an accidental shooting in Afghanistan in August 2006, was among a group of people who spent more than a year lobbying the federal government to change the criteria for awarding the new Sacrifice Medal. The criteria has been revised the so that every Canadian soldier who has died in Afghanistan will be recognized.

Bad day expected for federal Grits

Four byelections seen as test of popularity

Liberals expect to be shut out of four federal byelections today and their rivals are already positioning the results as a rejection of Michael Ignatieff's shaky leadership.

The contests will most likely amount to a confirmation of the status quo, with the Bloc Quebecois hanging on to two ridings in Quebec, New Democrats holding on to another in British Columbia and the Tories reclaiming a Nova Scotia riding that had been a longtime stronghold until Bill Casey, a former Conservative MP, captured it as an independent in 2008.

But all four races are sufficiently tight that they could conceivably produce upset victories for the Conservatives and the NDP.

In many respects, the more interesting battles are over second place, with both the Tories and NDP hoping that strong finishes will give them momentum.

By contrast, the Liberals don't appear to be factors in any of the races.

None of the ridings has ever been prime Liberal turf. But rarely has the once-mighty, self-described natural governing party seemed so thoroughly out

"If you're the official Op-position, I think you'd be expected to do well in byelections in the midst of a global economic down-turn," Conservative party spokesman Fred DeLorey said yesterday.

East Germany startled the world at the 1976 Games by capturing 40 gold medals, second only to the powerhouse Soviet Union. The number of reported new cases annually of mesothelioma shot up 67 per cent over a decade and a half — from 276 across the country to 461 according to the most recent federal figures.

Experts warn that the upward trend will continue for years as Canada feels the residual impact of its asbestos boom, and will likely be far worse in developing countries that still heavily use Canadian exports. Most people diagnosed with mesothelioma have only six months to two years to live. In B.C. deaths from asbestos-related diseases have increased as much as 69 per cent.

The Mounties have arrested a 37-year-old Rwandan man in southern Ontario and charged him with war crimes related to the 1994 genocide in his home country.

Windsor resident Jacques Mungwarere was taken into custody late Friday. He made a brief court appearance Saturday in Ottawa, where he was remanded in custody and his case held over until Thursday.

He becomes the second

But the case, which has been over six years in the making, is shrouded in secrecy. The RCMP war crimes unit would only confirm that Mungwarere was accused of committing an act of genocide in the area of Kibuye, Rwanda.

It was the scene in 1994 of a horrific massacre where at least 2,000 ethnic Tutsis died when bulldozers knocked down the church where they had sought refuge. RCMP Sgt. Marc Menard refused to go into details about the allegation against Mungwarere, saying that federal prosecutors will have to answer specifics. Officials with the Justice Department were not immediately available to comment.

Traffic deaths can be preventable

ombine H1N1, media hype and transit, and the result seems to be a new and exciting way to die while getting from place to place. Call me old-fashioned, though, because I'm still more worried about getting hit by a car.

I'm not saying H1N1

Im not saying HINI isn't a problem: After all, 18 Albertans have died so far. I don't take that lightly, but at least I can take comfort that vaccination has begun, many of the deaths had contributing factors, and the problem is being taken seriously — even if the provincial government is still getting its act together.

ETS is doing its part by disinfecting buses and trains nightly. It could go wild with hand sanitizer stations, too, but can't just ban everyone with the sniffles.

Common courtesy already dictates trying as much as possible not to sneeze and hack on your neighbours. To do otherwise is simply anti-social, flu season or not.

As a germophobe, I tend to train surf and press buttons with a knuckle. Really, though, washing your hands would suffice.

With my H1N1-ontransit fears under control, I'm back to the things I normally worry about while getting around.

Just last Tuesday, two women were killed in a crash on the Sherwood Park Freeway near 71 Street, bringing Edmonton's traffic death toll up to 30 on the year. Desensitized as we are, this didn't elicit much of a response.

Neither did the deaths of 410 Albertans in 2008. After all, that was actually a good year — there were 458 traffic fatalities in 2007. Missing in these already high numbers are hidden deaths from air pollution, usually estimated at upwards of twice the number of crash fatalities.

Somehow, society has accepted this as the cost of driving multi-tonne metal boxes around. Meanwhile, whether we drive or not, even crossing the street in Edmonton is a risk: A staggering 12 city pedestrians were killed in 2007.

Last month, Mirra Gatapia crossed the street after getting off an ETS bus. Eastbound traffic had stopped at the crosswalk, but a westbound truck did not. She died from head injuries. Another pedestrian was struck the same way last week.

While there's no vaccine, there are many things we could be doing. Lowering residential speed limits is one. Council is mulling it over, but there's still an appalling amount of resistance.

It's time for some serious soul searching. It's time to stop giving so many perfectly avoidable deaths so little thought.

Brian Gould is a transportation planner and has served in a variety of roles with the Transit Riders' Union of Edmonton.

More reasons to remember November

Last week, I invited readers to write in with thoughts on the all-important question, "November: What is it good for?" Here are the results.

Seventy per cent agreed there's no excuse for November. Ten per cent asked for more jokes about the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Five per cent offered November trivia, including Dale (Ottawa), who reports, "When Julius Caesar changed the calendar from 10 months to 12 he left the name of November, which means 'nine,' the same even though it was now the 11th month."

Which just goes to prove that Julius couldn't deal with November either.

An impressive 15 per cent of those who wrote in were actually able to come up with reasons to love November. Here's a sampling.

Kathryn in Calgary writes: Thank you so much for letting us know that calories consumed in November don't count. I immediately upsized to an extra-large latte. You were serious about that, right?

Um ... sure ...

Anshul, from Edmonton, says: I love November because it's the anniversary of when I immigrated to Canada from southern India. In the taxi from the airport I could see snow blowing sideways and I was shivering so hard I thought I'd got sick. I asked the driver if the weather was always like this. He said, "Oh no. Sometimes it gets really wintery." I almost went right back home.

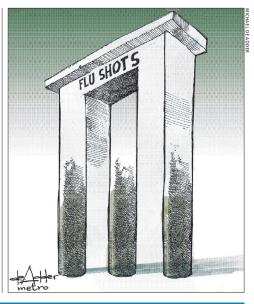

Ah yes, fond memories. Katrina writes from Victoria: I love November because it means that in just three months there will be spring flowers in my garden.

OK, from now on, when it's a weather-related question no one from Victoria is included.

John (Toronto): You've forgotten the most important event of November. Remembrance Day. Our chance to remember and to thank those who gave their lives for us.

Yeah and ... no. There's no way to make that funny. Thank you, John.

'Sustainable' syndrome

Everyone uses it, but what does the S-word really mean?

In the '60s, it was groovy. In the '90s, it was radical. It seems every decade has a trendy word that can either stick in the popular lexicon or quickly become dated or lose its meaning. One word that's getting a lot of use these days is "sustainable."

The dictionary definition states "to be able to maintain at a certain rate or level." However, in the last few years, it's turned into a mar-keting buzzword that is used to hawk everything from cereal to travel packages. And some young environmentalists wonder if the well-intentioned meaning will soon be lost.

Emilia Kennedy, a Simon Fraser University master's candidate, is currently doing her thesis on this subject. The 28-year-old said it's "urgently necessary" to start raising concerns about a word that is so important, yet so broadly used.

"Sustainability is the idea of the three P's, the triple bottom line — people, prof-it and pandas. Or environment, equity and economy," she said. "It's the desire to do everything right, which is noble. But I started noticing that it came with problems."

Kennedy said the categories behind the word environment, equity and economy — are being "pa-pered over." She referred to the catchphrase "Save the Environment," stressing that it's a slogan that encompasses the entire plan-limited resources and limited time," she said. "If it came down to saving a penguin or saving a panda, which one would you pick? The word 'sustainability' doesn't offer us any tools for which to pick."

Ultimately, Kennedy hopes her research helps her understand the political consequences of a word that is agreed upon by nearly everyone. She uses "free-dom" or "democracy" as similar examples.

"It's a slippery term," she said. "Perhaps when we talk about sustainability, it might be more valuable to further qualify what we mean when we say it."

Rhianna Nagel with the Environmental Youth Alliance in Vancouver relates to Kennedy's concerns, and said she's worried that "sustainability" is too much of an "easy sell." Nagel, 28, said she doesn't dismiss the positive aspect of the word, as it's able to attract those who might not be interested oth"If it came down to saving a penguin or saving a panda, which one would you pick? The word 'sustainability' doesn't offer us any tools for which to pick."

However, stressed the real challenge would be relaying the whole picture to that exact group.

"We live in a consumerist society," Nagel said. "It's tricky to know exactly how to go about getting through to people (about) what their commodities are and what they mean in terms of sustainability.'

One veteran environmentalist disagrees with such criticism. John Robinson of the University of British Co-lumbia's Department of Geography has been involved in what are now called sustainability issues since the mid-1970s He referred to the simple language used in the United Nations as an example.

"As diplomats know, innegotiations have to use broad language to keep everyone in the room," he said. "If you define things too precisely, you lose a lot of people who have a slightly different definition '

Imagine a year of self imposed exile from consumer society — life with no money. Mark Boyle has been living in a caravan, volunteering on an organic farm, using cuttlefish bone and fennel seeds as toothpaste and blogging on his he sounds just fine.

"I planned everything carefully so it's not like it came as a shock. I began my life without money on Buy Nothing Day (buynothing-day.co.uk) and I have no intention of returning to my consumer self. I'm going to use the money from a forthcoming book deal to buy a piece a land where I will set up a free community, a place where people can live without money, grow their own food and use up waste food.... That's all part of a

I needed to reconnect with the things I consumed in order to see their reper-cussions. The jolt came three years ago, I was sitting with a friend, discussing world issues. You can campaign all you want but are vou solving something?

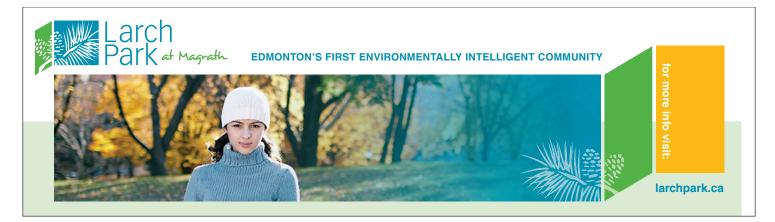

For Boyle, a typical day involves foraging for nettle leaves to make tea, cooking on a rock stove and 45 minute workouts using a breeze bloc.

"The hardest thing is the impact on my social life as not having money isn't great for female partners or friends. It's not like I can go for a pint in the pub (he's had a total of three over the past 11 months) or the cinema," says Boyle.

Forest practices put to test

Canada stays ahead in certification programs

Certified forest products may not look any different. But whether they are copy paper, lumber or packaging, they come with a bonus - buyers know the fibre is from a responsible source.

That's especially important in North America where consumers both at home and in international markets want to know they are supporting good forest practices.

Kathy Abusow is president and CEO of the independent Sustainable Initiative (SFI), one of the fastest-growing forest certification programs in the world. She says the rapid growth shows more people are coming to understand the value of certification on the ground and on the store shelf.

But Abusow also knows there is a lot of work ahead. "Just 10 per cent of the world's forests are certified, and that's not enough," she says.

"A key goal of the SFI program is to work with all credible forest certification standards to find ways to expand certification and support responsible

To be certified, forest operations must be audited by an independent, third-party accredited certification body. The SFI forest standard, for example, is based on principles that promote sustainable forest management, including measures to protect water quality, biodiversity, wildlife habitat, species at risk, and forests with exceptional conservation value.

Chain-of-custody certification extends into the marketplace by tracking fibre content from certified lands through production and manufacturing to the end product. The SFI program also recognizes that just a fraction of the world's forests are certified by providing fibre sourcing requirements that support responsible forest management on SFIcertified lands and on millions of additional hectares that are not certified. Buyers who see an SFI label on paper or wood products can be confident the fibre is from a legal and responsible source.

North America has about half of the world's certified lands so Canada and the United States are well positioned to deliver a steady supply of certified fibre at a time when there is increasing demand for green building and responsible paper purchasing. In Canada, there are three forest certification programs — the Canadian Standards Association and the Forest Stewardship Council as well as SFI. The Canadian Council of Forest Ministers says all three "demonstrate, and promote the sustainability of forest management pracin Canada". And CCFM is not alone. Governments and corporations across the United States, United Kingdom, Japan and many other countries recognize these forest certification programs as a tool to promote sustainable forest management.

Probe finds 'phantom' sales

A two-year probe of the restaurant industry in Canada has uncovered at least $40 million in "phantom" cash sales so far, says the Canada Revenue Agency.

And the amount of hidden cash income — with no taxes paid — will likely be much higher once the pilot project concludes in March, officials say.

So-called zappers and phantom-ware have been around since at least the mid-1990s, but prosecu-tions have been few and far between. The Canada Revenue Agency launched a two-year pilot project in 2008 to better focus its investigations into the socalled "electronic suppression of sales," or ESS, by sending in teams to selected establishments to ferret out hidden software in cash-register systems

Before the pilot began, the agency had identified 11 such cases — and has since found others, though a spokeswoman would not provide details. The new cases have been referred to

"Preliminary work indicates that ESS is prevalent Canada,' Workman said in an email.

"These are ongoing investigations, and the CRA has identified additional businesses using electronic sales suppression.

Once the pilot is complete in March and the level of fraud better estimated, the agency will launch the next enforcement phase, she added. Restaurants were chosen because of the high volume of cash sales.

Natural gas producers feel pinch from tolls

The cost of transporting natural gas eastward from Alberta is expected to rise significantly next year for producers, but that does not necessarily mean consumers will notice a difference on their home-heating bills.

"It would be a reasonable expectation that if shippers and the energy companies are paying more, they'll probably try and recoup those costs through the consumer," said Tara O'Donovan, a spokesperson for the Na tional Energy Board, the federal regulator tasked with approving pipeline tolls. "But ... it's not always the case."

Natural gas is the predominant home-heating fuel throughout most of Canada, though some parts of the Maritimes still rely on heating oil.

TransCanada Corp. ships about nine billion cubic feet of natural gas per day from Alberta to the Quebec-Vermont border. The Calgary-based company charges producers a toll for every unit of natural gas that passes through the pipeline. That cost is currently $1.19 per giga-joule; TransCanada warns that in 2010 that price could rise to between $1.65 and $1.90 per gigajoule.

Car Insurance Roadblock

Consumers concerned insurers don't want drivers with tickets or accidents

Worried Your Spotted Driving Record Means You've Got Nowhere To Turn For Car Insurance?

Don't be. While it's true that, all things being equal, your tickets and accidents make you a more expensive risk to insure than a similar car and driver with a clean driving record, that doesn't mean you should have trouble finding insurance – assuming you know where to look. Different insurance companies target different types of business and this is reflected in things like their claims service, marketing efforts, discounts, and most importantly for you, their rates.

Should I Just Accept That I'll Have To Pay A Bundle?

No. Sadly, this is a mistake many drivers make and it can be a costly one, especially if they don't bother to shop around for the lowest rate available. The key to finding the best rate, especially if you have tickets or accidents on your driving record, is to figure out which insurance company of the more than 20 in Alberta has the best rate for your particular situation. And with rates varying so wildly across companies, chances are you are not with the company that has the lowest rate for your profile right now.

Mapping the wild west for water

s a child growing up in Mexico, Alfonso Rivera used to look out his window waiting for the rain to start. He loved seeing how the rainy season would transform cracked, dry dirt into to moist mud. "I would smell the soil and put it on my tongue."

He forgot about the mingling of water and earth when he did an undergraduate degree in civil engineering. But soon he became interested in hydraulics and underground water and ended up doing his PhD in Paris in hydrogeology — the study of groundwater and how it moves through underground rock.

This relatively new science — it's less than a hundred years old — was in demand in Europe after Rivera finished his studies. Companies were looking for underground places to safely store wastewater from nuclear power plants, so he kept busy for nearly 15 years studying rock formations and aquifers in Germany, Switzerland and France.

Then, in 1999, he heard about a job in Canada. The Geological Survey of Canada, which is part of Natural Resources Canada, wanted to do a groundwater inventory of the whole country. This was a unique opportunity; most of the groundwater across Europe and the U.S. is already mapped.

"It makes me feel like those adventurers who went west in the 18th and 19th centuries," says Rivera, who got the job, became fluent in English — his fourth language — and fell in love with Canada and Quebec City, where he lives.

To map out an aquifer, hydrogeolgists go to an area where groundwater is suspected — Rivera can tell from looking at a land-scape merely from the window of a helicopter what might lie beneath — and drill small wells called piezometers from which they collect water to test it and measure its pressure.

Using numerous piezometers over a few months, Rivera can construct a mathematical model that helps him map out where water lies underground.

As a professor at Laval University, he devotes about one day a week to working with his masters and PhD students.

This new field is a busy one, with not enough hydrogeologists for the work available.

"As soon as we have a student finish a masters degree, they're already gone before they're done their thesis."

Diane Peters once hawked magic pens at the Canadian National Exhibition. She's now a writer and part-time journalism instructor.

Author: Bahaa Taher Publisher: McClelland & Stewart

Price: $32.99 (Hardcover)

Winner of the inaugural International Prize Arab Fiction in 2008, Bahaa Taher's Sunset Oasis weaves politics, passion and the power of a locale unknown set against a late 19th-century Egyptian landscape.

betraying his British bosses, military officer Mah-moud Abd El Zahir is disciplined through relocation to distant Egyptian oasis Siwa. Joined by his Irish wife Catherine, the couple's common ground begins to disintegrate when shunned by locals. Sunset Oasis provides a snapshot of ruin in Egypt's past, sentiment realized in the experiences of a husband and

Laying It On The Line

Author: Buzz Hargrove Publisher: HarperCollins Price: $32.99 (Hardcover)

As former national president of the Canadian Auto Workers trade union, Buzz Hargrove witnessed the pattern of poor decision-making that led to the 2008 car industry crumble years in advance

During a time when the manufacturing sector struggles to recover, Hargrove aims to deconstruct the crisis in Laving It On the Line. From insider corporate dealings to the prattle in political backrooms, Hargrove reveals his hand using digestible language. Maintaining his focus on workers rights, Hargrove explores how labour movements must adapt to the new economy and what it will take for Western auto manufacturers to bounce back. BRIAN COULTON/

Swift dishes in SNL monologue

didn't leave anyone out of her monologue when she hosted Saturday Night Live on the weekend, usmagazine.com reports.

Although most hosts erform monologues perform written by the show's team of writers, the 19year-old country crooner wrote her intro herself, Swift's rep confirms to usmagazine.com.

The singer dished on ex-boyfriends, rumoured flames and — of course -Kanye West in an opening monologue song titled, Monologue Song (La La La).

After mentioning how she loves baking and things that smell like winter, she also sang that she liked writing songs

One name in particular? Joe Jonas, her ex-boyfriend, whom she has claimed dumped her in a 27-second phone call.

"You might think I'd bring up Joe, that guy who broke up with me on my phone, but I'm not going to mention him," sings. "Hey Joe, I'm doing real well. Tonight I'm hosting SNL, but I'm not going to brag about that."

Another shout-out was to rumoured beau, New Moon's Taylor Lautner.

"And if you're wondering if I might be dating a werewolf from Twilight," she sings before looking

Joe wants money from son Jackson's estate

CASHING IN Joe Jackson thinks the estate of his late Michael Jackson, should be paying him a monthly allowance, and he's gone to court to ask for it

Jackson, who reportedly receives $1,700 month in Social Security payments, is seeking funds to cover $15,000 a month in expenses. "He does not have a regular or steady source of income, and he was dependent upon the money provided by his son, Michael Jackson, through his wife, Katherine Jackson, for his support," his court filing states, according to the New York Daily

While Michael's will made provisions for his mother and children, there was no mention of his father, with whom he had a notoriously difficult relationship.

Mustard-mayo halibut with tarragon-orange zucchini

INGREDIENTS:

1 tbsp (15 mL) olive oil 4 zucchini, halved 4 Pacific halibut fillets 4 tbsp (60 mL) mayonnaise 2 tsp (10 mL) Dijon mustard leaves from 2 sprigs of fresh tarragon Zest of 1 orange Orange wedges, to serve

METHOD:

1. Preheat broiler to high. Brush ovenproof dish with oil and lay zucchini inside, cut side down. Brush with oil and broil 3 minutes. Turn zucchini, brush with oil and cook 4-5 minutes or until browned and tender Set aside in dish 2. While zucchini are broiling, prepare halibut. Brush grill pan with oil and put fillets in, skin side down. Mix mayonnaise and mustard, then spread this evenly over fish. Put pan under broiler and cook about 5 minutes. Topping should be golden and fish firm and cooked through. If fish begins to brown too quickly in first 1-2 minutes of cooking, lower pan so that it is farther away from heat. 3. Sprinkle tarragon and orange zest over zucchini. Transfer halibut to warm plates and add zucchini. Garnish with orange wedges and serve.
